Why Use Photo ID?

The New Yorker ran a piece called "My Fake Job". In the article, Rodney Rothman reported his days posing as an employee for an unnamed Manhattan dot-com consulting firm. He walked in, laid claim to a desk, got a phone extension under a phony name, then spent three weeks pretending to make business calls. He enjoyed free snacks, company-paid massages and a free T-shirt. The company quickly recognized the reporter's description and tightened security procedures. Photo ID would likely have avoided this embarrassment, although the outcome could have been much worse. Slack security procedures could open a company up to corporate espionage. The moral? Photo ID should be an integral part of your security plans!
